Recent reliability failures in California, causing rolling blackouts, have raised both the level of public awareness and concern over what is being referred to by the media as an “energy crisis”. The question on everyone’s mind? – Could it happen here in New York?

In an effort to answer this question, the New York Energy Buyers Forum is sponsoring this panel to discuss summer energy reliability and recommended pro-active emergency measures to take in the event that the City’s electric supply is interrupted.

Speaking from the consumer perspective is: Anthony Campbell, Chairman of the NYEBF

The Consolidated Edison representative will be announced.

Speaking on behalf of the City of New York, we have: Richard Miller, Senior Vice-President of Energy for the New York City Economic Development Corporation

Speaking about available energy incentive programs, we have: Jennifer Kearney, Associate with Luthin Associates Energy Management Consultants

Our moderator:

Catherine Luthin, Principal, Luthin Associates Inc.
